

macaulay research assistantship program

The Macaulay Honors College Research Assistantship Program matches CUNY faculty members pursuing original research in their various disciplines with curious and dedicated Honors College students who are eager to learn more about a given intellectual field of inquiry. These pairings of scholars and students work together to create new knowledge in a discipline, affording students an opportunity to make valuable contributions to the work of their faculty mentors.

Students will learn through hands-on research experience under active supervision, and may request payment from their Opportunities Fund account.

The process of matching student interests and faculty needs is simple. Faculty write a short proposal describing their project and the work involved, which we post on Macaulay CareerPath. After students submit a short application describing their interests and preparation, faculty then choose their assistants, usually after an interview. The Macaulay advisor then approves the position based on the description and a "Research Commitment Form" filled out by both the student and faculty member. Students are eligible to apply for a stipend from their Opportunities Fund by filling out a "Payment Request Form." Students are required to present the work completed at the Macaulay Scholars Research Expo held in May.

MACAULAY
HONORS COLLEGE AT CUNY

For more information, visit:

macaulay.cuny.edu/opportunities/internship-and-research-opportunities/research-assistantships/